Supreme Court under the ambit of Article 32 and Article 13 (judicial review) has time and again stood as the custodian of the fundamental right (chapter III) of Indian constitution. As a result, Many fundamental rights like Article 21 (right to life and personal liberty) have been expanded to realise their true meaning.

Expanding scope of Article 21

① Gopalan case (1950) - provided that Article 21 is available against executive arbitrary action but not against arbitrary legislative action (took narrow interpretation of Right to life)

② Menaka Case (1978) expanded scope of Article 21 to wider ambits and not just to animal existence. Provided for due process of law

- ③ Naveen Singh Johar judgement (2018) - decriminalised homosexuality to uphold personal liberty for same sex couples
- ④ NALSA judgement (2014) - provided & upheld equal rights of transgenders
- ⑤ Ranjit Singh Case (2024) - Supreme court expanded scope of Article 21 to protection against climate change

Chasing the directive principle of state policy (Article 46) and several other fundamental rights of equality (Article 14-18), government brought in the SC & ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989 for safeguarding weaker sections of the society against exploitation.

Despite of the act, there are several limitations

- ① NCRB data - year on year increase of an average 4% in crimes against SC, ST
- ② Phenomenon of dominant caste → fear of social boycotts → SC, ST members refrain from going to police
- ③ Excessive representation of upper caste in police forces → executive apathy towards grievances of weaker section
- ④ trend of not recording a crime under the SC, ST act rather reporting it as a general crime.

Recent incident in MP. where an upper caste individual urinated over an ST person represent the grave situation of marginalisation.

- ③ definition of sexual acts, rape not up to date - such as penetrative sex is only considered as rape.

Recently, supreme court judge also called the government for looking into the definitors of the act to account for changing realities of the growing population → attaining maturity at younger age.

Way forward

- ① Sex education and widespread awareness of the law must be prioritised especially through schools.
